AND
SUMMARY OF EVENTS
FOR 1882.

THE YEAR'S RECORD.

CIRCUIT OF THE WORLD'S HISTORY.

1882 has been a year of profound peace in all parts of the world except Egypt, Austrian Bosnia and Ireland. The crisis which had been impending so long at Cairo found France unwilling to join its ally and financial partner in the dangers and responsibilities of military intervention. Great Britain, entering upon the campaign with reluctance, crushed Arabi's soldier-mob by a single blow. In Ireland the failure of one coercion act has been followed by the practical success of another, and the island is apparently settling down into tranquillity after a transition period of assassination and lawlessness. Austria-Hungary has suppressed a revolt in its newly acquired territory; Germany, harassed by political dissensions, is still the most pacific as well as the strongest State in Europe; Russia has been spared by the terrorists, yet has remained in a state of feverish unrest; France is still exhausting the reputations of its public men without finding a strong, stable Government; and Italy has ventured to make hazardous experiments in educational suffrage and department elections. In the United States there has been a remarkable political reaction against an unpopular President, who was seeking to build up a faction at the expense of a great party.

THE UNITED STATES.

When the year opened, public attention in the United States was concentrated upon the murderer of President Garfield. Guiteau no longer sat among the lawyers and clamored for his rights as a member of the bar. He was in the prisoner's dock; but even there he sought to play his part—quick-witted in some respects, but a fool withal, blasphemous, malignant, hideous, a vulgar cheat. He remained to the end noisy, vindictive and abusive, sparing neither the bench nor the counsel on either side, nor his own relatives, and affording as scandalous a spectacle as was ever witnessed in a court of justice; and the effect of his rimbaldry and effrontery was intensified by the coarse harangues of his principal defender and by the levity and buffoonery of the audience. The trial came to an end on January 25, after he had been allowed to read a speech to the jury which the Court had previously excluded. Judge Cox's charge bore heavily against the prisoner, and the jury, after having been out twenty-five minutes, rendered a verdict of "guilty as indicted." Guiteau received it with an angry howl: "My blood will be upon the heads of that jury—don't you forget it." Despite the scandalous proceedings in court, one good effect had been produced. The experts had been enabled to satisfy themselves that he was playing a part and to ground their conclusions on his conduct in the court-room while was acting entirely without restraint; their evidence convinced the jury that he was not an irresponsible agent; and the community, which had been disposed to question his sanity, was not left in doubt in regard to the justice of the death-sentence. When the legal expedients had been exhausted, the zeal of a few morbid sentimentalists was quickened and the shrill cry was heard here and there that the Nation would be disgraced by the hanging of a lunatic. Owing to the course adopted by Judge Cox, this was not the judgment of Americans in general, nor was their opinion shaken in the least by the gallows scene, when with Bible-reading, blasphemous prayer and doggerel droned with shrieks and tears, he made the most of his last moments of morbid egotism. This most despicable of assassins was hanged on June 30, a twelvemonth lacking two days from the assassination of President Garfield.

THE PRESIDENT'S POLICY.

Meanwhile President Garfield's successor, naturally disliking the manner in which he had entered the White House, was looking a long way ahead with a view to securing, if possible, his own renomination. The reorganization of the Cabinet was completed in April, when Mr. Teller was appointed Secretary of the Interior, and Mr. Chandler Secretary of the Navy, his predecessor, Mr. Hunt, having been nominated as Minister to Russia. Only one member of President Garfield's Cabinet, Secretary Lincoln, was allowed to remain in office, and he had been a conspicuous advocate of the third term. In the Garfield Cabinet the main body of the National Republican Convention had four representatives, while the powerful minority that had voted for General Grant had as many as three. In the reorganized Cabinet the minority faction in the convention was given six of the seven seats. The President's determination to divide the political prizes among the leaders and adherents of a single faction was not shaken as time went on. The great missions were given to ex-Senator Sargent, Mr. Taft, Mr. Young, and Mr. Astor, and the minor political patronage was distributed not always among partisans so blatant and so unscrupulous as Michael J. Dady, of Brooklyn, but invariably among those whose personal loyalty to the President could be depended upon. At the same time these changes were made with more discretion and deliberation than his zealous supporters considered necessary. They were anxious to have a clean sweep of the Garfield office-holders, and when the President showed signs of vacillation, they accused him of renouncing his principles and deserting his associates. So fierce had become the outcries during the closing week of February that he abruptly sent to the Senate the nomination of Roscoe Conkling for Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. The demonstrations of anger and indignation with which this nomination was received in all parts of the country gave the President an opportunity for serious reflection, of which he apparently made little use. The office was declined by Mr. Conkling greatly to the relief of the public, especially as so eminent a jurist as Judge Blatchford was named in his place; but the wire-pulling on the part of a Kitchen Cabinet made up of the President's former associates in New-York politics went on with increased energy. Early in the spring it was whispered that Secretary Folger would be the Administration candidate for Governor of that State. The rumor was denied many times, but the scheming went on in the dark, and before the summer was over, the President's followers were making a systematic attempt to secure control of the State convention. At the same time Senator Cameron, whose arbitrary methods and personal dictation had created a formidable political revolt in Pennsylvania, was recognized as the President's confidential adviser in Washington. "Bossism" and "machine politics" were looming up as the colossal evils of the American system.

LOWER LEVELS OF DIPLOMACY.

The policy of the Garfield Administration was reversed abroad as well as at home. Mr. Trescott and Mr. Walker Blaine had been sent to South America to offer the good offices of the United States in negotiating peace between Peru and Chili and to express the hope that a money indemnity for the expenses of the war would be accepted by the victorious nation and all territorial demands be relinquished. No sooner had they sailed than Mr. Frelinghuysen decided to cancel the instructions and not to allow the envoys to make any authoritative utterance to either Chili or Peru in regard to the questions at issue. The fact that the confidential instructions had been modified was communicated to the Chilean Minister in Washington, and telegraphed by him to Santiago, and when the envoys presented their credentials they were informed by the Foreign Secretary that their mission had virtually ended, owing to changes of purpose of which they had received no information from their own Government. After this mortifying experience it was impossible for them to make any use of the moral power of the United States in effecting a settlement between the two republics. Invitations, moreover, had been extended to various nations on this continent to send representatives to a peace congress to be held in Washington during November. The State Department on the plea that Congress had made no provision for necessary expenses, withdrew the invitation and informed the various Governments that the projected conference had been abandoned. The diplomatic prestige of the United States on this Continent was materially impaired by these two incidents. In like manner the claims of this country in regard to the control and supervision of any interoceanic canal that may be constructed across the American isthmus, have not been renewed with vigor and courage since Mr. Blaine's retirement, although the facility with which Great Britain can close at pleasure such a water-way was demonstrated in the course of the Egyptian complications. Mr. Frelinghuysen has written one long State paper on the subject of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, but to use the President's own words it "seems likely that time will be more powerful than discussion in removing the divergence between the two Nations." If the extended correspondence with the British Foreign Office with reference to the Irish-American suspects half secured their release it is mainly because the British Government found it convenient to order a general clearance of political prisoners.

A DECLINE IN ADMINISTRATION.

In domestic administration as in diplomacy there has been a gradual subsidence from the high level of department work in the Garfield Cabinet. There have been no brilliant achievements in finance; the efficiency of the postal service has not been conspicuously increased; and the prosecution of the Star Route thieves after many exasperating delays has proved thus far a signal failure. The trial of Brady, the Dorseys and their confederates began on June 1, and was brought to a close on September 11 by the conviction of two of the minor culprits and a disagreement of the jury in regard to the guilt of the main defendants. This verdict, accompanied as it was with charges of bribery, was set aside by the Court and a new trial ordered. This trial was opened in December, ex-Senator Spencer with the Marshal, Postmaster and Assistant Postmaster of the District of Columbia, and the foreman of the Government Printing Office, having been previously removed for obstructing the course of justice in these cases. When there has not been a positive decline in administrative efficiency, there has been stagnation. On one question alone has the President made a courageous stand. The veto of the River and Harbor bill in August was a patriotic act justified by the most irrefutable arguments. It was a wanton and reckless waste of public money, $18,000,000 being voted for improvements when not more than $5,000,000 or $8,000,000 could be profitably expended, and the President appealed to the moral sense of Congress to sustain his objections. The bill was passed over the veto by 65 Republicans, 53 Democrats and 4 Greenbackers in the House, 31 Republicans and 24 Democrats voting against it; and by 18 Republicans and 23 Democrats in the Senate, 12 Republicans, 3 Democrats and 1 Independent voting against it. The veto of the first anti-Chinese bill was sustained by Congress and a new measure following the lines suggested by the President was subsequently signed by him. His main objections to the first bill were that the passport system ought not to be revived and that a period of twenty years during which immigration was to be suspended practically violated the existing engagements with the Chinese Government. The new bill substituted ten years for twenty, provided a system of certificates of identity and prohibited the naturalization of the Chinese. Experience has already demonstrated that the act cannot be enforced, that the period of ten years is too long, and that the Chinese Government are convinced that the treaties have been violated. The President's course in dealing with this question was not as logical as his unequivocal veto of the iniquitous River and Harbor bill. With regard to the remaining acts of the long session, the Tariff Commission, the Geneva Award, anti-Polygamy and Apportionment bills and the financial measures, he was in full accord with Congress.

A POPULAR REVOLT.

During the summer and autumn the President made a systematic albeit reckless attempt to promote the interests of his faction and himself at the expense of the Republican party. By the most unscrupulous use of patronage and by monstrous acts of forgery his friends succeeded in reversing the attitude of the State Committee and in forcing the nomination of Secretary Folger upon the New-York Republican Convention. A campaign begun with shameless fraud was conducted with inane stupidity. The most notorious machine politician was placed at the head of the State Committee; the vacancy caused by the withdrawal of the strongest candidate on the ticket was filled by the only persistent applicant for it; and long and labored letters of acceptance served to dishearten and demoralize the party. Nominations secured as these had been had no binding force upon the loyalty of self-respecting Republicans. There was a revolt against the Administration ticket from one end of the State to the other, and Grover Cleveland was elected Governor by a Democratic and Republican majority of 193,824. In Pennsylvania the malignant management of Senator Cameron, who had refused all offers of compromise from the Independents based on the withdrawal of both Republican tickets and the nomination of a new one in a legitimate way, met with a crushing rebuke in the election of a Democratic Governor. Ohio had already been carried by the Democrats, the temperance question adding to the popular dissatisfaction excited by an unpopular Administration. In November the Republican majorities were swept away in Indiana, Connecticut, New-Jersey and Massachusetts, where General Butler was elected Governor. So many were the Republican losses throughout the North that the Democrats obtained control of the new Congress by a substantial majority. The results of the Congressional elections were: Democrats, 191; Republicans, 119; Readjusters, 6; Independents, 5; Greenbackers, 2. In only one quarter had the Republicans gained ground. That was in Maine, where they had succeeded in retrieving their disasters in previous years. This conspicuous success naturally brought Mr. Blaine into prominence as a candidate for the Presidency who would be heartily supported by the progressive elements of the party. He took the earliest opportunity of repressing these demonstrations by announcing that he could not be a candidate in 1884.

THE WARNING HEEDED.

The warning received by President Arthur naturally had a sobering effect not only upon him and his followers but also upon the Republican majority in the present Congress. His message to Congress bore unmistakable evidence of hours of serious reflection induced by his political disasters. His recommendations in regard to the practical legislation urgently required by the country were well received, and even the friends of Civil Service derived satisfaction from his unequivocal utterances. The Republicans in both Houses entered upon the session with a resolute determination to adopt the recommendations of the Tariff Commission, involving a reduction of 25 per cent in duties, to reduce internal taxation, to cheapen postage and to adopt as good a scheme of Civil Service Reform as could be agreed upon. Measures which in the protracted session earlier in the year they would have regarded as chimerical they were now disposed to consider seriously and to advocate with courage and persistence as matters of fundamental policy. The Hubbell mode of levying political assessments no longer commanded the services of a single apologist, and bills were presented which if enacted would render unnecessary such laborious prosecutions as that conducted against General Curtis. Internal improvements would not have commanded any attention even if an unexpended balance of $17,734,944 had not remained in the Treasury from the disreputable, log-rolling scheme of the previous session. The estimated surplus of the new fiscal year being estimated at $120,000,000, notwithstanding the recent decline in the export trade, there was no reason why internal taxes should not be materially reduced and the tariff revised. These great measures have already been undertaken and a Civil Service bill has passed one House. It is this gain in party intelligence and principles that compensates for the overwhelming defeat caused by machine politics and despotic management. Disaster has not overthrown the Republican party. It is reinvigorating it for a new career of progressive influence and practical usefulness.

GREAT BRITAIN.

Mr. Gladstone's Administration has emerged from the uncertainties of Irish legislation and the complexities of European diplomacy, from the catastrophes of Irish crime and the excesses of malevolent partisanship, reinvigorated and triumphant. When Parliament was opened in February the situation in Ireland was most disheartening; Mr. Parnell and other leaders were more powerful in their prisons than they had been at Westminster; agrarian crime was rapidly increasing; injuries were not to be trusted with even the clearest cases of guilt; the Land Act was not working satisfactorily; concessions were repulsed; discontent was more sullen than ever. The Conservatives, eager to make a partisan use of the difficulties with which the Government were beset, at once empowered a committee of the Lords to investigate the operation of the Land Act, and influential leaders openly courted an alliance with the Home Rulers by recommending the issue of debentures and an extensive scheme of Government purchase. At the same time the Conservatives condemned the proposed reform of procedure as a deliberate plot to stifle free speech, to enslave minorities and to make the Premier little less than a political dictator. Denounced by Lord Salisbury as a revolutionist, repulsed by the Irish members as a heartless despot, and systematically insulted night after night by the Young Tories, Mr. Gladstone did not despair, but struggled on with tireless patience and dauntless courage. The Lords were censured by the Commons for their unwarrantable interference with the operation of the Land Act, the Premier making an unanswerable plea for the supremacy of the only assembly that could decide great issues and express the National will on supreme occasions. When this affront had been resented, the work of revising the antiquated forms of procedure was resumed, but so persistent was the Opposition that only one critical division—318 to 279 against the Marriott amendment—had been taken when the half-session came to an end. In Westminster there was apathy where there was not malevolent partisanship; in Ireland there was social revolution; in Egypt a great cloud had already arisen; and the worst was still to come.

THE IRISH CRISIS.

The warm welcome accorded by the Premier to certain practical suggestions made by Irish members in reference to arrears of rent induced one of Mr. Parnell's associates to confer with him in Kilmainham and subsequently with Mr. Forster. The result of these informal negotiations was the Treaty of Kilmainham, as it was termed by derisive Conservatives. The Government became convinced that more could be effected by the release of the imprisoned Home Rulers than by their continued confinement. Accordingly the Irish policy was suddenly reversed. Mr. Parnell and his associates were released; a speedy jail clearance of political prisoners was promised; and large concessions in relation to arrears of rent were foreshadowed. This was a confession that force bills had failed. If the Ministry had not surrendered outright, they had proposed an alliance with the Home Rulers in agrarian legislation and a truce in political persecution. Mr. Forster, unwilling to share with the Ministry the responsibility of this change in policy, resigned the Chief Secretaryship, and faint-hearted Whigs united with contemptuous Tories in proclaiming Mr. Parnell King of Ireland. At this critical juncture, when the Ministry were shifting their ground and the Home Rulers were flushed with triumph, Lord Frederick Cavendish, the new Chief Secretary, and Mr. Burke, the Under-Secretary, were assassinated in Phoenix Park, Dublin (May 6).

This diabolical crime, although attributable primarily to the machinations of secret societies which were bent upon breaking up the alliance between the Home Rulers and the Government, was in the track of that social revolution for which Mr. Parnell had given the signal. When the Irish people had been systematically educated in lawlessness, it was not surprising that the release of the Parliamentary suspects should be celebrated by the murder of a Cavendish bearing a message of reconciliation and peace. These cowardly and unprovoked assassinations wrung from their chosen representatives the tardy confession that it was lawlessness which well nigh made them despair of the future of the island. As for the Liberal leaders, they were exposed momentarily to the merciless criticism either of having grossly miscalculated the tendencies of disorder, or of having lacked courage in suppressing the agrarian revolt. They were compelled to recast their arrangements for the government of the island. A Coercion bill far more stringent than the one then in operation was immediately introduced, and encountered the desperate resistance of the Irish members, being read a third time in July after a protracted struggle in which the ordinary rules of procedure had been arbitrarily suspended.

As a counterpoise to repressive legislation the Arrears Act was forced through the Commons. This was an Irish remedy for discontent prescribed by the Home Rulers themselves. This necessary measure after leaving the Commons, where it had received heavy majorities, was taken in hand by Lord Salisbury. His amendments were poisoned arrows aimed at the heart of the measure. One of them would have enabled the landlord to withhold his consent whenever he might choose to question the tenant's inability to pay the arrears. When the Lords' amendments reached the Commons a momentous crisis seemed imminent, but it was averted through Mr. Gladstone's tact and the patriotism of the majority of the Peers, who virtually refused to follow their leader. All the vital principles of the bill were reaffirmed, including that of compulsory settlements, and a series of minor concessions was made to the Lords, marked ingenuity being shown in converting the landlords' mortgage on the tenant-right into a worthless lien. The bill was accepted by the Lords, their leader having sustained a most ignominious defeat.

THE MINISTRY STRENGTHENED.

When Parliament adjourned in August to October 24, the prospects of the Government had materially improved. Two Ministers had resigned, Mr. Forster and Mr. Bright, the latter in consequence of foreign complications, and with the exception of the two Irish bills, the vote of credit for the expedition to Egypt and the usual votes in Supply, the session had been absolutely barren; yet the Government were stronger before the country than they had been since the general elections of 1880. This result was mainly due to the caution and self-restraints with which they had acted in Egypt, and the vigor, sagacity and independence with which they had entered upon the campaign, when they had been reluctantly forced to admit that there was no alternative. The success of General Wolseley's military operations, as complete as it was sudden, reinvigorated the Ministry, so that the passage of the new rules of procedure in the autumn session was a foregone conclusion. The Government's majority on the two critical divisions on the Closure were 84 and 44, and the remaining rules were adopted with only one important concession—permission to move the adjournment of the House when 100 members rise in support of the proposal. The Closure is applied under restrictions which amply secure the rights of minorities, more than 100 affirmative votes being required when there are from 1 to 39 against it, and more than 200 when the minority exceeds 39. The session ended in December.

BETTER PROSPECTS IN IRELAND.

There has been a decided improvement in the condition of Ireland. The distinct aim of the new Coercion bill was to secure convictions for crime, experience under the first Force bill having proved that it was worse than useless to arrest and imprison suspects for an indefinite period without bringing them to trial and punishing them. In this respect the act has answered its purpose. By means of special provisions for change of venue and the impaunelling of juries, justice, so long paralyzed in Irish courts, has been dealt out with a strong arm. The first conviction of a murderer in mid-September was followed by the imprisonment of a member of Parliament who sought to vitiate the effect of the verdict by impugning the motives and conduct of the jury. The slaughter of the Joyce family in County Galway seemed to be designed by organized desperadoes as a warning to witnesses to hold their tongues, but it was not heeded, and on December 15, four months after that barbarous crime was committed, three murderers were hanged for it, the death sentences of five of their accomplices having been commuted previously to imprisonment for life. These and many other convictions for agrarian crime led to a new outbreak of lawlessness, by which the lives of judges were menaced, a detective was killed and a juror was murderously assaulted. Outrages like these were obviously designed to intimidate judges, juries and witnesses. But the island is settling down into a state of tranquillity, and there is a popular reaction against lawlessness. The settlements made or registered under the Land Act have averaged 4,600 a month and the reductions of rent have ranged from 15 to 35 per cent with an average of 20 or 22 per cent. The Arrears bill was neglected at the outset, but owing to the refusal of the Government to extend the time within which it may be used, the applications have rapidly increased during the past month. The government of the island has been admirably administered by Lord Spencer, who succeeded Lord Cowper as Lord Lieutenant in May, and Mr. Trevelyan as Chief Secretary has been both efficient and sagacious, discriminating sharply between political and criminal offences. The firmness with which the strike of the constabulary force was met was a conspicuous proof of improvement in administration. The base of operations of the agitators has been narrowed by the Dublin Conference, at which Mr. Parnell's ascendancy was acknowledged and advocates of uncompromising measures like Mr. Dillon were deprived of influence. The new National League was not intended as a working organization, and even if it were it would be cut off from the main base of American supplies, the policy of the leaders being too moderate for Patrick Ford. Notwithstanding a menace of famine the prospect is brighter, on the whole, than it has been since the Land agitation opened.

QUEEN AND PREMIER.

The Queen was fired upon at Windsor on March 2 by an insane assassin, but being favored by her usual good fortune, escaped unharmed. Although the Premier completed in December a half century of active service in the Commons, it does not seem probable either that he has any desire to retire to private life or that the Liberals are prepared to dispense with his services. The party successes of the year have virtually been the triumphs of one man, who has afforded the most conspicuous proofs of his sagacity and efficiency as a political leader as well as of his wisdom and patriotism as a practical statesman.

THE EGYPTIAN COMPLICATIONS.

When the year opened Egypt was a complex problem with five factors. These were the Army, the foreign Controllers, the Khedive, the Sultan and the Assembly of Notables. The army was the actual source of political authority, for it had set up and pulled down Ministries. The Control was a potential source of political authority, for it represented two rival European Powers, which might or might not be able to agree upon a policy of intervention. The Khedive was disposed to take the advice of the Controllers, but neither he nor they could deny that ill-disciplined military mob of 15,000 men. The Sultan had only a nominal ascendancy in Egypt, and he was willing to intrigue with Arabi, to shuffle with the Powers, and to play fast or loose with the Khedive, on the bare chance of finding military intervention from Constantinople some day on the cards. The Chamber of Notables had been appointed by the Khedive's officials, but had neither power nor disposition to resist military pressure. Of the five factors, the Khedive, the Sultan and the Notables were of small account. The actual power of the Army was pitted against the potential authority of the Controllers.

In January, M. Gambetta, foreseeing that a crisis was impending, was anxious to arrange a scheme of joint intervention. Lord Granville was disposed to favor Turkish coercion as a substitute for an Anglo-French expedition, and insisted upon consulting the Powers. M. Gambetta's downfall left Lord Granville at liberty to pursue a drifting policy, and when the crisis finally came, there was no prearranged basis of intervention. For months Tewfik had been alternately wheedled and menaced. His government had fallen into contempt. Arabi was actually governing Egypt by virtue of his influence over the Army, the officers of which he had bribed by promotions. In January he told the Notables that they must demand the privilege of supervising the budget. They complied; Cherif, the Premier, resigned; Mahmoud Sami, Arabi's candidate, succeeded him; and Arabi himself became Minister of War. In March the military government was supreme. Arabi was a Pacha and seventeen of his supporters were colonels; and between them and the treasury were the Controllers and the possibility of foreign intervention. A plot against Arabi enabled him to give a practical demonstration of his supremacy. Numerous arrests were made and a body of Circassian officers were tried and convicted by court-martial. The Controllers perceiving that military government was becoming all-powerful, advised the Khedive to commute the sentences to simple exile on half pay. He complied and was immediately defied by Arabi and the Ministers. At first they undertook to convoke the Assembly of Notables over his head, threatening to supersede the family of Mahommed Ali; but when six iron-clads had been sent to Alexandria, they nominally submitted to the Khedive, Arabi professing his willingness to go into exile for a year. This was merely a bit of theatrical display. The military mob was supreme; Arabi was its idol; and the Western Powers were apparently bent upon having the Sultan enforce their will. Meanwhile, the Sultan and Arabi had a private understanding of their own.

THE CRISIS.

The British and French Consuls-General presented (May 25) an ultimatum which had been agreed upon by their Governments. It was a formal demand for the dismissal of Arabi and the resignation of the Ministry, and was based on the necessity for the restoration of the Khedive's authority in view of the European interests affected by the continuance of domestic disorder. The Sultan, eager to exercise his sovereign rights, at once sent to Cairo Dervish Pacha, with a suite of fifty-eight persons, to negotiate a truce between the Khedive and the Ministry which would be satisfactory to the Consuls-General. On June 11 the Arab population of Alexandria, excited by a chance encounter between an Arab and a Maltese, rose against the Europeans and a massacre ensued in which several hundred persons were killed and the British, Italian and Greek Consuls were severely wounded. The British and French squadrons in the harbor were heavily reinforced, the Khedive retired to Alexandria, and Arabi was master of Cairo. The massacre had rendered foreign intervention imperative. The Turkish Commissioner had not accomplished anything. Great Britain and France, anxious to avoid a military expedition, summoned a European conference at Constantinople to consider the whole complication. The Porte refused to attend the sessions, but the diplomatic chatter went on week after week, even after the bombardment of Alexandria by the British fleet had rendered a campaign inevitable. These negotiations served no other purpose than to fill the pause required for preparations for war. The Sultan finally sent a representative to the Conference and acceded to the conditions imposed by the Powers, but the British Government by that time had concluded to dispense with his assistance. Lord Dufferin amused himself by interposing one objection after another to an Anglo-Turkish convention, and it was not until the campaign had ended that the last one was removed. The Sultan's services as a peace-maker were accepted when they were no longer required.

THE BOMBARDMENT AND THE CAMPAIGN

Arabi had employed laborers at Alexandria in strengthening the fortifications and constructing new earthworks. Admiral Seymour, after demanding a cessation of work on these forts, threatened to fire upon them if they were not surrendered within twenty-four hours. This threat was executed on July 11. The forts were bombarded throughout the day and gradually silenced, the iron-clads not suffering any material damage. On the following day operations were not resumed owing to rough water, and under cover of a white flag Arabi's forces evacuated the fortifications and left a mob reinforced by liberated convicts at liberty to burn and pillage the city. When the marines landed they were able to protect the Khedive, who had narrowly escaped being murdered in his palace, but the city was a mass of smoking ruins. The wanton destruction of Alexandria could only have been prevented by the landing of a military force; and the invasion of Egypt by such a column, even if the troops had been at hand, would have been a glaring act of war when hostilities had not been declared and Europe was striving to promote the ends of peace. The bombardment itself was an act of self-defense on the part of the fleet, and the subsequent military operations could be justified on the highest grounds, diplomatic resources having been exhausted and military intervention being necessary and unavoidable in order to repress anarchy and revolt in the country traversed by the water-way to India. It would be more difficult to defend the ultimatum of the Consuls-General, in which Arabi's expulsion from the country and the resignation of the Ministry were demanded.

After a short period of vacillation the British Government resolved to send an expedition to Egypt and to invite the cooperation of France. The downfall of M. de Freycinet, after he had relinquished the idea of doing anything more than to defend the isthmus itself, left England free to enter upon the campaign single-handed. The marines at Alexandria were speedily relieved by detachments from the Mediterranean garrisons and heavy reinforcements were dispatched from Portsmouth. The War Department was prepared to furnish without delay an entire army corps, and an Indian contingent of 10,000 men was immediately organized. The men went forward with tolerable rapidity, and notwithstanding delays in the shipment of war material and supplies, the administration of the department was creditable. By the third week in August a force of 25,000 men was concentrated at Alexandria and the Indian contingent had embarked at Bombay for Suez. General Wolseley, instead of besieging Arabi's fortifications behind Alexandria, made a feint of attacking Aboukir and then suddenly shifted the base of operations to the banks of the Suez Canal. Port Said and Suez were occupied, and within twenty-four hours the Canal was in the possession of the British forces. The change of base was a most judicious one, as the high water of the Nile was avoided, the Indian and Mediterranean forces were concentrated at Ismailia, and Arabi was forced to withdraw his troops from his intrenchments and make a stand on the banks of the Sweet Water Canal. From Ismailia a rapid advance was made across the desert in order to protect the supply of fresh water, and after two days skirmishing, outposts were established at Kassasin Lock. Here a night attack was subsequently repulsed, a heavy force of Egyptians having been massed against an exposed position. Having got ahead of his supplies and military stores, General Wolseley halted for several weeks until he was prepared to deliver a staggering blow. The enemy, recovering from their demoralization, fortified their camp at Tel-el-Kebir and finally reconnoitred the British position in force, but were again repulsed.

At last General Wolseley was ready to advance with 11,000 bayonets, 2,000 sabres and 60 guns. The intrenchments at Tel-el-Kebir were approached under cover of darkness and assaulted soon after dawn on September 13. The enemy were taken by surprise, the defence was spiritless, and within half an hour the stronghold was captured. There was no flinching anywhere along the British line, and the victory was complete. A large number of guns and several thousand prisoners were taken, the British losses being unexpectedly light—54 killed and 242 wounded. The retreat of the Egyptians was rapidly converted into a stampede. General Macpherson by a forced march westward reached Zagazig on the same day, and the cavalry pushed southward towards Belbeis. Cairo was entered by the advanced guard on September 15, and Arabi was arrested there by the police. The surrender of the camp in front of Alexandria was speedily negotiated and the war was at an end. The magnitude of General Wolseley's victory and the slight loss of life which attended it silenced criticism respecting some glaring defects of the transport service. He was credited at once with the highest qualities of generalship. His troops were reviewed at Cairo and subsequently at London, and honors and decorations were showered with a lavish hand upon the principal officers, General Wolseley and Admiral Seymour being created peers. Tel-el-Kebir was a feat of arms, and the campaign, as a whole, was an achievement, of which the Nation have every reason to be proud.

THE SETTLEMENT.

With the disappearance of the military mob which had usurped the functions of government, the work of reconstruction began. Of the 33,000 British and Indian troops, 21,000 men were speedily withdrawn, and a garrison of 12,000 men was left to occupy the country temporarily. This garrison is maintained at the expense of the Egyptian treasury, the cost of the campaign being borne by the British Government. Valentine Baker was intrusted with the duty of organizing a gendarmerie, but has not yet succeeded in providing a substitute for the army of occupation. The Khedive's authority was restored throughout Egypt as soon as Arabi's army was put to rout, but his administration has been practically conducted by Lord Dufferin during the last two months. The proceedings against Arabi and his confederates in rebellion, after impeding the settlement of Egyptian affairs for many weeks, were arranged by the diplomatist and disposed of with a theatrical flourish. Arabi pleaded guilty on December 3, to the charge of insurrection, and was sentenced to death by a court-martial. This sentence was immediately commuted by the Khedive to perpetual exile, under penalty of death in the event of return. Six of his chief confederates shared the same fate, being exiled with him to Ceylon, where they will be kept under light surveillance and be allowed to retain their private property; and a large number of the rebellious officers have either been banished for various terms of years, or been forbidden to quit their estates. These compromises with the insurgents have been disapproved by the Khedive's Ministers, several of whom have resigned. Acting upon Lord Dufferin's advice, the Khedive has formally invited the Powers to sanction the abolition of the Control, and is negotiating with him a treaty defining the conditions of British occupation.

BRITISH POSSESSIONS.

Sir John Macdonald, having introduced a Protective Tariff in the Dominion of Canada, appealed to the Provinces in June to support his economic policy. The canvass was vigorously conducted, the Opposition charging the Premier with conspiring with the French Bleus to degrade the most populous Province, and to silence its constituencies by an infamous gerrymandering bill. The Government carried the elections on the tariff issue, securing a majority of sixty in the Dominion Parliament. In the provincial elections the Opposition made heavy gains.

Cetewayo has been restored to his kingdom in Zululand. The chiefs having been refused a hearing by Sir Henry Bulwer, the royal prisoner obtained permission to go to England and plead his case. This he did with such success that he set sail on September 1 for Cape Town with the assurance that he could return to his throne on the condition of remaining heartily friendly to the British Government and not reorganizing his army. The Zulu chiefs have welcomed him, even John Dunn, who was his bitterest foe, offering no opposition to his restoration.

ITALY AND THE VATICAN.

Italy has lost in Garibaldi the last great figure of its heroic age. He had ceased to be an active force in European life, yet his death, which occurred on June 2, created a profound impression. In Italy it was followed by extraordinary manifestations of hero worship, sovereign, Parliament and people vying with one another in honoring his memory and the public mind, only half-occupied with commonplace questions of finance, suffrage and faction politics, was momentarily refreshed by reminiscences of an order of things that had passed away.

Premier Depretis has materially strengthened his political position. During the spring of the scheme electoral reform was completed. The constituencies were enlarged by the reduction of the property qualification and the adoption of a scheme of educational suffrage, and these changes were supplemented by a modified form of the French Scrutin de Liste, adopted in February by a vote of 285 to 125 in the Lower Chamber. Each conscription returns a small number of members on the Belgian plan, and minority representation is secured on the English principle of three-cornered constituencies, electors voting for four deputies in districts where five are to be chosen. These changes rendered the October elections the most important in recent Italian history. The new House contains about 320 supporters of the Government, 100 members of the Right, about 40 of the extreme Left, and as many more of the Left Opposition and Independents. The Government thus has a clear majority over all factions and has the promise of permanent political support.

THE VATICAN.

The breach between the Italian Government and the Vatican has been widened by a decision of the Court of Appeals. An architect employed in the Pope's household sued the major-domo in the civil courts, after an ecclesiastical commission had been appointed to settle his claim. The counsel for the major-domo formally protested against the proceedings on the ground that the Court did not have jurisdiction within the Vatican. The Court decided in favor of the major-domo on matters of fact, but overruled the plea of lack of jurisdiction. The Court of Appeals has reaffirmed this decision, virtually declaring that the jurisdiction of the State authorities extends within the Vatican, notwithstanding the Law of Guarantees.

The Vatican has not yet given any signal to Italian Catholics to take part in public affairs. Abroad its policy has been characterized by consummate tact. It has not been duped by Bismarck's subtleties; it has prevented a visit of the Emperor of Austria to the King of Italy; and it has provided as a substitute for Mgr. Czaicki, the conciliatory Papal Nuncio at Paris, M^r. de Rendé, an ecclesiastic of singular prudence and moderation.

FRANCE.

The year has witnessed a remarkable decline in the political authority of the French Premiership. M. Gambetta might have remained in office for an indefinite period if he had been willing to abandon the measure with which his name was associated. This he would not do. In proposing a partial revision of the Constitution he made the Scrutin de Liste the central idea of his Ministerial policy. The Deputies gave warning of their intentions by appointing a Committee on Revision which was almost unanimously opposed both to limitation and to the Scrutin de Liste. M. Gambetta attempted to save his measure by an eloquent speech in which he repelled the charge of seeking a Dictatorship, but he was listened to with coldness and impatience. His resignation was nominally based on a vote of the Deputies in favor of unlimited revision. This vote was 282 to 227. The Scrutin de Liste, which was the main question at issue, was defeated immediately after his withdrawal by a vote of 305 to 110 (January 26). The Deputies were influenced partly by vague apprehensions excited by the aggressive character of his diplomacy, but mainly by a secret distrust of department elections as tending to increase the political authority of party managers and to break up personal relations between constituencies and their representatives. Although he had been in office only ten weeks and had been overthrown by a majority of three to one, M. Gambetta's exit was made with the dignity of a great Minister.

The succession reverted to M. de Freycinet. From the outset his Ministry was weak. On three occasions its measures were defeated, and the Ministers of Finance, Interior and Justice were kept in office only through the personal intervention of the President. He was powerless, however, to avert the consequences of M. de Freycinet's diplomacy. When the Egyptian crisis arose, the Premier fancied that with a little dexterity he could avoid the opposing currents of opinion in the Chamber and keep the Ministry afloat in the slack-water between intervention and non-intervention. After striving for a season to adhere to two lines of policy that were absolutely inconsistent—namely, to have nothing whatever done in Egypt and, simultaneously, to join England in active intervention—he asked for a small credit of $1,500,000 for naval armaments, which was readily granted. Then came another period of vacillation and a final demand for another vote of credit for the protection of the Suez Canal. This was rejected (July 29) by a vote of 450 to 75. The Ministry immediately resigned and in the course of ten days a new Government was formed. Made up of Under-Secretaries and obscure politicians, and headed by a Life Senator, M. Duclerc, who had never been conspicuous for political capacity, it is the weakest and least efficient Cabinet that has been organized since the Republic was proclaimed. The Chambers adjourned as soon as the Ministry was gazetted, and did not reassemble until November, when the Premier presented a programme of phrases rather than principles. This Ministry, representing the minority of seventy-five which voted with M. de Freycinet still lags upon the scene, destitute of political authority. The year ends with a political event of supreme importance—the death of Gambetta.

Cabinet crises and diplomatic complications have left very little leisure for domestic legislation. Scant progress has been made in the reorganization of the municipalities and the judiciary. The Divorce bill has been passed and a spirit of hostility to the Church has been constantly evinced. During the autumn, undue uneasiness was caused by riotous proceedings at Montceau-les-Mines and Lyons, by the discovery of dynamite and bombs in public buildings and the circulation of Socialist manifestoes. The financial condition of the Republic is less favorable than it has been in many years, owing to the recklessness with which public expenditures have been authorized. A panic was narrowly escaped in January when thousands of investors were ruined by the collapse of the Union Générale, a scheme of religious banking for the mismanagement of which two of the managers have been sentenced each to five years' imprisonment. Abroad a policy of aggression has been persistently followed. In Tonquin a city has been besieged; in Madagascar a warlike tribe is receiving aid in subjugating the dominant race; in the Congo Valley M. de Brazza's claims are to be vigorously enforced; and in Tunis, where one helpless Bey has succeeded another, the army has not been withdrawn and the country is administered by a French Minister and officials. This colonial policy requires enormous financial outlay.

THE MILITARY EMPIRES.

Prince Bismarck began the year by giving an authoritative version of his ideas of constitutional government in the Imperial Rescript, defining the relations of the Emperor to his Ministers, and reminding them and all public functionaries that they were the servants of the Crown and not the representatives of the Parliament, and consequently were bound to support the Government policy at elections. Subsequently the Chancellor reopened diplomatic relations with the Vatican and virtually brought the Kulturkampf to a close. In the Reichstag he met with a crushing defeat on June 14, when the bill establishing a tobacco monopoly was rejected by a vote of 276 to 45. Even strong Conservatives voted against him, although he declared that the measure was essential to the maintenance of the imperial system. The Reichstag was immediately prorogued for six months, and when it reassembled the Deputies were informed that the Bundesrath had decided not to give effect to their decision in favor of the abolition of the law relating to the unauthorized exercise of ecclesiastical tical functions. In Prussia the relations of the political parties were not materially changed by the October elections. The results were: Conservatives, 169; Clericals, 97; Poles, 18; and Liberals of all shades, 125, including 37 Progressists. Although the Conservatives had made striking gains at the expense of the Liberals, no party could muster a majority, the elections affording new evidence of political disintegration. Prince Bismarck has virtually appointed his successor in the event of his sudden death, for Count Hatzfeldt has become Secretary of Foreign Affairs.

The insurrection in Bosnia and the Herzegovina was virtually suppressed early in the spring, but the large force posted there has not been materially reduced, the feeling against the military conscription not having subsided. The Delegations voted in April $11,500,000 for the maintenance of the troops and made additional grants in November, apparently without being convinced that the condition of affairs was as favorable as Herr von Kallay, the new Finance Minister, represented. The coalition Ministry still remains in office, stronger if anything than it was a year ago, and pledged to carry out important electoral changes and schemes of army reform. There has been a number of Socialist trials in Hungary, and great excitement has been caused in the Italian quarter of the Empire by the execution of Overdank, who was accused of plotting against the Emperor's life.

Russia has enjoyed a year of comparative tranquillity. Late in February twenty-one prominent Socialists were condemned to death or penal servitude after a series of State trials conducted with great secrecy; late in May General Strelnikoff, public prosecutor, was shot at Odessa, and a few days afterward two of the assassins were executed; and subsequently a plot for destroying the Kremlin during the festivities which should attend the Emperor's coronation was discovered. There has been, however, such a marked decrease in Socialist outrages that the extraordinary precautions taken when the Czar visited Moscow in September were apparently unnecessary. General Ignatieff retired from the Ministry of the Interior in June and was succeeded by Count Tolstoi, whose reactionary tendencies had never been concealed. The Russian Government has ordered no new advance in Central Asia, although engineers have made preliminary surveys for a railroad from Askabad in the direction of Herat. In Europe M. Giers has visited the diplomatic capitals on a mysterious mission, and the relations of the three military empires have recently been represented as being so precarious that Prince Bismarck found it necessary to make public the outlines of his secret understanding with Austria. In reality there seems to be no ground for apprehending an outbreak of European war.

OUTLYING COUNTRIES.

The Sultan's morbid apprehensions and suspiciousness have been evinced by frequent Cabinet changes. In December he dismissed one Premier, and two days afterward restored him to office and ordered the arrest of a large number of Pachas on charges of conspiracy. Throughout the year he has been the slave of his own fears and has remained so far as possible in seclusion in his palace.

Prince Milan, having accepted the title of King at the invitation of the Servian Parliament, shared the perils of royalty on October 23, when he was fired upon at Belgrade by the widow of a rioter who had been executed in 1878. The Greeks quarrelled with the Turks in September over a disputed boundary, but peace was restored after 400 men had been killed and wounded.

Sagasta remains master of the political situation in Spain, although the influence of the King is steadily increasing. In the spring a large portion of the floating indebtedness was funded by the Minister of Finance and a commercial treaty based on free-trade principles was negotiated with France. The Premier was not a statesman who could seriously undertake the revision of taxation throughout the kingdom. In October those Liberals who considered Sagasta too reactionary by nature to adopt a progressive policy, called Marshal Serrano from his retirement to head a new movement. Sagasta at first seemed disposed to accept office under him, if he would accept the existing Constitution. This he refused to do, preferring the Constitution of 1869; but eventually there were dissensions among his followers and the whole movement collapsed.

Peru and Bolivia have sought in vain to make peace with Chili. The victorious Government, as soon as it learned that the policy of the United States had been reversed and that no authoritative action could be taken by the special envoys, refused to treat with Calderon and demanded the cession of Tarapacá and the occupation of Peru as far as Moquegua until an indemnity of $20,000,000 should be paid. Expeditions were made into the interior and the prostrate States have remained at the mercy of the conqueror. On the Isthmus considerable work has been done on the interoceanic canal.

China and Japan have been making threats of war, and coveting the peninsula of Corea. Diplomatic relations have been opened with that country by several countries, the United States included, with the unfortunate effect of inflaming the passions of the anti-foreign party and precipitating an insurrection and attack upon the royal family.
